

ICP: Innovations in Civic Participation

Last Updated Thursday, 26 July 2007

ICP envisions a world where young people in every nation are actively engaged in improving their lives and their communities through civic participation. ICP promotes civic participation as a strategy to address important issues around the world and supports the development of service as an emerging social institution.

ICP has a wealth of knowledge and experience in program and policy development. Whether you are incorporating a civic participation component into your country's national youth policy or improving the impact of your service program, ICP can help you achieve your goals.

ICP works with government representatives, non-profits, community-based organizations and educational institutions to support and strengthen service policy worldwide.

ICP realizes that consistent development of the field of service will not occur without a strong push toward measuring the existence and effects of policies around the world. Once successes and gaps have been identified, policy development assistance can become more targeted and effective.

Spurred by the need for more complete information on youth service policies worldwide, ICP is currently conducting a global scan to inform the service field about the many aspects of policy creation in relation to service.
